Description

Antique Japanese bronze vase designed for ikebana (traditional Japanese flower arranging), dating from the Meiji period (1868-1912). This refined vessel is cast in bronze and formed in imitation of a woven basket, a decorative motif widely favoured in late 19th-century Japanese metalwork and inspired by bamboo flower baskets traditionally used for ikebana. The surface displays finely modelled basket-weave texture, complemented by applied twin loop handles and a pierced footed base. The vase measures 25.5 cm in height and offers a strong sculptural presence while remaining elegant and well balanced. It was intended both as a functional flower vessel and as a decorative object for display in a tokonoma or interior setting. The vase retains its original metal inner
