Description

A true collector's item from American industrial heritage, this fire alarm box comes from the prestigious Holtzer-Cabot factory (Boston). This circular model, emblematic of fire stations and public infrastructure from the early 20th century, features a robust red lacquered cast iron structure and a central bronze plate with enamel markings. Condition and Functionality: The item is in beautiful condition with its original patina. It is sold complete with its Yale key (often missing) allowing access to the mechanism. The activation lever is functional and still operates the internal siren (audible but relatively weak sound, indicating the age of the spring). Note: The small protective "Break Glass" is missing, which still allows the lever to be operated without difficulty. Cast iron, bronze, brass. Origin: United States
