Description

A superb Charles X period portico clock, circa 1840, remarkable for its refined combination of mercury-gilt bronze and fine gold, and an exceptionally high-quality black marble with a deeply luminous and meticulously polished surface.

Its classical architecture, with four round columns resting on finely chased bases and capitals, lends the piece a noble and perfectly balanced presence. The generously sized dial is delicately adorned with a border of chased water leaves. Its center reveals an elegant, radiating spiral guilloché pattern, highlighting the
