Description

A rare and highly decorative Empire-style wallclock, dating from the Napoleon III period, circa 1870, signed on the dial and on the mechanism: "Planchon à Paris," a renowned line of 18th-century clockmakers, referenced in Tardy's Dictionary of French Clockmakers. Gilt bronze.

A wide ribbon bow, ending in a long, finely undulating drape that realistically imitates the natural movement of fabric, forms the decorative element and appears to suspend the clock. The clock is housed within a dark green patinated bronze cylinder, adorned with laurel branches, symbols of victory and glory, framing a very large and sublime domed white enamel dial, highlighted by a finely chiseled border of stars. The entire piece is protected by a domed glass.

crafted gilt hands, chiseled with a multitude of laurel leaves.

The highlight of this piece is a magnificent imperial eagle, creating the illusion of flight as it carries the clock. The sculpture is particularly expressive: detailed plumage and a dynamic posture convey an impression of power and protection.

Original spiral escapement mechanism, unmodified. Strikes the hours and half-hours on an antique bell. Mechanism numbered 785.
