Description

French Collection. The Kachina cult is a fundamental element of the religious and cultural practices of the Hopi, an Indigenous people of Arizona, USA. The Katsinam (singular Kachina), carved wooden figures, play a central role in ritual ceremonies, particularly through traditional dances performed during annual rain-invoking festivals. These carefully crafted and richly decorated dolls are not simply works of art; they fulfill an important educational function within Pueblo communities--a cultural group that includes not only the Hopi, but also the Zuni, Village Tewa, Acoma Pueblo, and Laguna Pueblo. Given to children at the end of ceremonies, the Kachinas contribute to the transmission of cosmological, spiritual, and social knowledge specific to these peoples. Each figure
