Description

Important antique bronze cauldron dating from the 18th century, of large dimensions. The vessel features a classic globular shape with a wide flared rim, reinforced edge, and a sturdy forged iron side handle secured with original rings. The base rests on three shaped legs, providing stability when used over an open fire. The surface displays an even aged patina, with signs of wear consistent with its age and historical use, enhancing its authenticity and period charm.

Originally intended for cooking over direct heat, it now serves as a striking decorative piece for rustic interiors, period kitchens, taverns, country houses, or folk art collections. Period: 18th century Material: bronze with iron handle Condition: good overall condition, with normal signs of age Origin: European tradition
