Description

This important sculpture, encased in polyester resin and attributed to the master glassmaker and biologist Pierre Giraudon (1923-2012), is a fascinating testament to the design and artistic experimentation of the 1970s. The work depicts a dreamlike cavalcade of two horses captured in mid-stride, moving through a landscape of natural grasses. The first figure is fashioned from a meticulous accumulation of gilded brass clockwork gears, pinions, and hands. The second is defined in contrast by a cluster of metallic fragments with coppery hues. Through its theme of repurposed objects and its "mass" composition, this piece powerfully evokes Arman's famous Accumulations, while retaining the crystalline transparency and naturalistic poetry characteristic of Giraudon's work. Light, playing through the
