Description

The figure is executed in fine bone china and finished in iridescent ivory glaze with painted details, producing luminous surface depth typical of Royal Worcester luxury display wares.

An original inventory label numbered 385 remains on the underside, indicating official collection provenance, alongside a lighter-toned technological firing contact area. The model derives from the celebrated 1869 centrepiece series and stands among the highest artistic achievements of Victorian Worcester porcelain.

Dimensions: Height 19.5 cm, width 9.8 cm, depth 10.2 cm; weight 550 g.

Condition: Hairline crack to the base. The iridescent ivory glaze naturally refracts light, creating soft tonal variations and reflective highlights across the surface; any apparent unevenness or "patchiness" visible in photographs is caused by light reflection on the pearly glaze and curved glossy surfaces rather than by defects or restoration. Otherwise in magnificent condition.
