Arnulf de Bouché (born July 6, 1872, in Munich; died March 25, 1945, in Langkampfen) was a German painter of nudes, genre scenes, and still lifes. Son of the glass painter Karl de Bouché (1845-1920), he received his first painting lessons from his father and then, starting November 2, 1863, studied at the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Munich. The primary subject of his works were female nudes, often set in an oriental setting. From 1901 onwards, he exhibited his works at the Glass Palace in Munich, and in 1914 he
