Description

Stoneware sculpture depicting a male face with a magnetic presence. This work belongs to the primitivist movement of the mid-20th century, borrowing expressive power and timeless character from tribal art. The treatment of the features, marked by closed eyes, lends the piece a hieratic dimension and a profound meditative serenity. The artist here favors an archaic aesthetic, prioritizing introspection and the predominance of materiality over realism. The work plays on a striking tactile contrast, characteristic of the artistic explorations of the period (La Borne movement). Perfect condition.
