Description

Minister's Desk in Rosewood by Claude Gaillard and Henri Lesetre for Ligne Roset, 1970s. Large "minister's" desk in rosewood (veneer with very pronounced grain), typical of French design of the 1970s. Generous top with a glossy finish, resting on a very stable and visually light metal sled base. The front is structured by pull-out shelves/sliding trays and a sculpted apron, designed for practical use (writing, files, accessories). Details of metal bands contrast with the wood, a signature aesthetic of the seventies, balancing luxury and functionality. A striking piece for an office, agency, or large living room, with a true architectural presence. Claude Gaillard & Henri Lesêtre, for Ligne Roset, created designs with a modern vocabulary blending fine woods and metal. Their approach
