Description

DescriptionThis extra large 19th-century terracotta olive pot, likely from Spain or southern France, was traditionally used for storing olive oil and produce. Hand-thrown with a rounded body, tapering base, applied loop handles, and a thickened rim, it reflects practical rural craftsmanship. The surface shows natural variations in ochre and sienna with visible throwing lines and kiln marks. Age-related patina and wear consistent with use enhance its authenticity and historic character.ArtistUnknown artisan, Mediterranean region, 19th century.Artist DetailsProduced by a regional potter within the traditional ceramic workshops of Mediterranean olive-growing communities. Large vessels of this type were essential storage jars, valued for strength and capacity.MovementsTraditional
