Description

Art Deco vase by the famous ceramist Jean-Jacques Lachenal. The vase has a crack under the base and a chip. JEAN-JACQUES LACHENAL 1881-1945 He was a student of his father Edmond, who taught him the techniques of modeling and throwing. When the latter relinquished the management of his Châtillon workshop in 1911, Jean-Jacques became the director of production and renovations, then the administrator and promoter. Three years later, he took over the entire father's workshop; He then turned to tableware, creating services where each piece was unique. After the First World War, he established a ceramics workshop for wounded soldiers, a philanthropic endeavor known as the "Wounded of the Lachenal Workshop." He later produced ceramic advertising items, working in
