Description

Good Quality Early 19th Century William IV Period Mahogany Extending Pull-Out Dining Table This early 19th-century William IV period mahogany dining table is a superb example of fine craftsmanship and elegant design. Its rich patina and beautifully figured mahogany top create a captivating piece, perfect for any refined dining setting. The table's molded rectangular top, with gently rounded corners, rests on elegantly turned legs, each terminating in large original brass castors. This attention to detail is typical of the late Regency/early Victorian period. The inclusion of two small original leaves (each 30 cm long) and one larger original leaf (51 cm long) allows for flexible seating arrangements, accommodating both intimate dinners and larger gatherings (8 to 10 people).
