Description

Large painted wooden display cabinet dating from the 19th century, opening with two wide glazed doors on the front. It features a straight, projecting cornice, slender uprights, and a molded base with framed panels. The paint is original, in a patinated gray tone. The interior retains its clearly visible wooden side racks for adjusting the shelves. The cabinet has no back, a typical feature of hatters' or shop display cabinets, designed to be placed against a wall to capture light. The locks are in place with antique brass keys. Original hinges and joinery. A generous size with elegant proportions, perfect as a bookcase, display cabinet for a collection, or presentation piece.
