Description

A bronze Art Deco sculpture by Luis-Albert Carvin depicts a seagull dramatically cleaving the air above stylized waves. The bird is captured with outstretched wings, its body stretched along a dynamic diagonal that accentuates the impression of speed and flight. The finely chiseled plumage and the subtle patina of the bronze emphasize the streamlined, aerodynamic silhouette, typical of Art Deco animal sculptures. The wave, rising in a broad, green-patinated sweep, serves as both support and motif, ascending from a rectangular base of black marble veined with gold, which anchors the composition with a luxurious, architectural presence.
