Description

This refined set of four painted wooden dining chairs exemplifies late 19th to early 20th century neoclassical revival design, distinguished by elegant openwork backrests centred with a stylised anthemion motif. The carved splat rises in a fan-like formation, framed by symmetrical linear detailing and subtle architectural elements that echo classical antiquity. Finished in a soft cream tone with muted sage green accents, the surface displays an appealing aged patina that enhances depth and authenticity. Handwoven rush seats introduce warmth and tactile contrast, complementing the restrained painted frames. Tapered legs and understated stretchers create balanced proportions and structural clarity, reinforcing the disciplined geometry characteristic of neoclassical taste. The combination of decorative refinement and practical craftsmanship reflects the revivalist interest in Greco-Roman ornament during this period, offering a harmonious blend of classical elegance and functional design suited to thoughtfully curated interiors. Artist Unknown maker, late 19th-early 20th century. Artist Details These chairs reflect the widespread neoclassical revival movement of the period, characterised by symmetrical composition, stylised botanical ornament, and architectural restraint. The anthemion motif and painted finish suggest production within a European decorative arts tradition influenced by earlier Georgian and Regency models. Movements Neoclassical Revival Artist Influenced by Influenced by the designs of Robert Adam and the broader European neoclassical tradition. Condition Original painted finish with age-related wear, minor scuffs, and patina consistent with use; rush seats remain in good, stable condition.
