Description

This authentic antique French copper stock pot dates from the late 19th century and beautifully reflects the craftsmanship of traditional European kitchens. Handcrafted from thick, solid copper, the pot features a warm, naturally aged patina that has developed over decades of use, giving it a rich depth and character impossible to replicate. The body shows subtle hammer marks and irregularities consistent with artisanal production. Two sturdy hand-forged iron handles are riveted securely to the sides, adding both structural strength and visual contrast against the glowing copper surface. The interior is lined with its original tin, now worn with age, revealing the honest signs of a well-loved culinary tool. The base is slightly raised with a traditional rolled edge, typical of practical cookware from this
