Description

An ancestral cult statue known as a "Kakudji." It represents a male bust. The arms are detached from the body, while the forearms and hands rest against the abdomen, encircling the navel. The delicate face is adorned with a beard. The complex hairstyle is styled in three parts: two small chevron-patterned bands above the ears, a wide chevron-patterned band at the back, and two small buns beneath this band. This aesthetically remarkable statue has retained its magical power at the top and the red fabric covering it. The same fabric was used as a belt. Wood with a beautiful patina from use, fabric. Height: 29 cm. Early 20th century. Provenance: Collection of Mr. Norbert Boutet
