Description

This impressive pair of herms depicting Bacchus, created in the early 20th century, is masterfully sculpted from Belgian black marble and Egyptian pink marble. These remarkable sculptural columns reinterpret the classical form of the herm, traditionally associated with Greco-Roman architecture and garden ornamentation. Each figure represents Bacchus, the Roman god of wine, fertility, and revelry, with refined classical features and a dignified expression. The contrast between the deep, polished Belgian black marble and the warm tones of Egyptian pink marble creates a sophisticated chromatic dialogue, enhancing their architectural presence. Their slender proportions and substantial weight give this pair an imposing sculptural impact, ideal for grand interiors, entrance halls, conservatories, or
