Description

A rectangular oak cabinet by Jacques Émile Ruhlmann, designed for the Cité Universitaire in Paris, comprises a central two-door cabinet flanked by open bookcases resting on staggered plinths. The design emphasizes horizontal lines and functionality, with adjustable shelves on either side and discreet round wooden knobs on the central doors. The warm, uniform oak veneer and softened edges exemplify the refined Art Deco vocabulary of Ruhlmann's later period, here adapted for institutional use while retaining its characteristic elegance.
