Description

Oil on canvas. Original canvas. Label on the back. Previous restorations. Alexis Grimou's painting is distinguished by an atmospheric delicacy that transmutes the legacy of Flemish realism into a purely Parisian sophistication. His portraits, often imbued with a theatrical and melancholic quality, are remarkable for their treatment of flesh tones, where light glides over the skin with a pearly, almost ethereal softness, anticipating Rococo sensibility. This refinement is manifested not only in the fluidity of the brushstrokes that define lace and silk, but also in the master's ability to capture the psychology of the sitter with serene introspection, transforming each canvas into an exercise in understated elegance where chiaroscuro serves a subtle and profoundly human beauty.
