Description

Painter: Bertrand Mogniat-Duclos (1903-1987), French painter, draftsman, and illustrator, primarily active in Paris. This landscape painting depicts several houses, perhaps a hamlet hidden among the trees. The scene is dominated by abundant vegetation: tall, slender trees occupy the foreground, and the light is soft, likely that of late afternoon. In the center and slightly in the background, the rooftops of houses can be seen, partially concealed by trees and bushes. In the foreground, a wooden fence crosses the composition horizontally, creating a separation. Light plays a crucial role: it filters through the foliage and illuminates certain areas in the background, creating depth. The overall effect is very harmonious. Technique: Oil on canvas. Painter: Bertrand Mogniat-Duclos. Dimensions:
