Description

This elegant antique French copper fish poacher is a beautiful example of traditional culinary craftsmanship. Crafted in heavy gauge hammered copper, it features a long, gently curved rectangular form designed specifically for poaching whole fish. The warm, richly patinated copper exterior displays authentic signs of age and use, enhancing its decorative appeal while reflecting its practical heritage. The poacher is fitted with solid brass side handles, securely riveted for strength and durability. The matching copper lid, edged with a subtle hammered border, is topped with a sturdy brass handle that echoes the side fittings. Inside, the tin-lined interior shows natural wear consistent with age and use. It includes its original removable perforated metal insert with lifting handles, allowing the fish to be easily raised from the cooking liquid. Both functional and decorative, this 19th century piece can still be used for traditional cooking or displayed as a striking element in a country kitchen, restaurant, or culinary collection. Its elongated silhouette and glowing copper surface make it an eye-catching and authentic statement of classic French gastronomy.
