Description

A spectacular tubular floor lamp dating from the 1970s, remarkable for the exceptional quality of its craftsmanship. The slender cylindrical stem is entirely covered with a decoration composed of thousands of tiny beads meticulously strung horizontally on copper wires. Every 21 beads, the copper wire is connected to vertical copper rods of a larger diameter, which in turn connect to horizontal rings with a chrome finish. The resulting uniformity creates a subtle interplay of texture and transparency. When lit, the lamp diffuses a warm, diffused light, enhanced by the chrome reflections and the delicate shimmer of the beads. The structure rests on a tripod base. The entire piece testifies to a monumental undertaking, requiring patience and precision, characteristic of exquisitely crafted artisanal
