Description

An elegant pair of Louis XIV period stools in carved walnut, resting on four cabriole legs ending in scrolls. The legs are joined by a flowing stretcher forming an elegant scalloped motif, typical of late 17th-century French furniture. The sturdy structure displays fine carving and a warm patina of aged walnut. The crossbars and stretcher reveal a design still influenced by the Baroque aesthetic characteristic of Louis XIV's reign. The seats are upholstered in a floral damask fabric in shades of red, embellished with decorative fringe and a row of upholstery tacks. The upholstery and fabric are later additions. A beautiful decorative set that could be used as occasional seating, at the foot of a bed, or in a classical interior. French work from the Louis XIV period, 17th century.
