Description

Patinated terracotta sculpture in bronze style of the bust of a man in the middle of the 20th centuryCreated during the split between academic classic and contemporary innovation, this bust of a man dating from the middle of the 20th century is interesting for its aspect faithfully reproducing the facial features of its subject, like a portrait made by an artist to his client, tinged with incipient surrealism.Its green patina offers an astonishing bronze aspect, offering a timeless style to this illustrious and charming stranger, a way of making the living immortal, of freezing what is moving.Although not signed, the gaze of this subject is poignant, and it offers an important presence, which will be perfect in a contemporary interior, enthroned on a beautiful chest of drawers or a library, this frozen gaze for eternity will
