Description

A pair of "Ninfea" folding armchairs, designed by Gio Ponti for Fratelli Reguitti in the 1950s, are a prime example of the elegance and formal lightness that characterize post-World War II Italian design. The frame is crafted from solid walnut, crafted with meticulous attention to proportion and fluid lines. The curved armrests, with their soft and harmonious profile, integrate seamlessly into the seat's folding mechanism, creating a balance between functionality and aesthetic refinement. The slightly inclined legs and lower crosspiece contribute to the structure's stability while maintaining a sleek and dynamic design. The backrest and seat are padded and upholstered. The Ninfea model represents one of the most interesting interpretations of the folding chair in 1950s Italian design: an object capable of
