Description

Pair of Egyptian torch lamp Holder by Maison Jansen, circa 1970, depicting a male and female figure in a hieratic stance, each holding a light fitting above their head.

The figures stand on molded octagonal bases. The bodies are made of cast iron, enhanced with bronze elements and gilt finishes. The headdresses and garments draw directly from ancient Egyptian iconography, reflecting the Egyptian revival aesthetic characteristic of Maison Jansen's decorative production in the 1970s. The sculptural volumes are powerful, and the lighting reinforces the monumental vertical presence of the silhouettes.

This model belongs to the tradition of theatrical
