Description

This elegant blue and white porcelain vase features a refined decorative scheme inspired by traditional East Asian ceramic design. The surface is entirely adorned with a repeating lattice pattern composed of stylized floral buds connected by softly curved cobalt lines, creating a rhythmic and harmonious motif across the entire body of the piece. The decoration is executed in underglaze cobalt blue on a luminous white porcelain ground, a classic combination long associated with Asian ceramic traditions.The vase presents a graceful silhouette with a gently rounded body rising toward a slender neck and a softly flared rim. This balanced form allows the continuous pattern to flow seamlessly from base to lip, enhancing the visual elegance of the piece. The interior is glazed in a soft creamy white, while the unmarked base reveals the fine porcelain body.Based on its decoration, glaze, and construction, this vase was most likely produced in the mid- to late 20th century, drawing inspiration from traditional Chinese blue-and-white porcelain motifs. Such pieces were commonly created as decorative ceramics for export markets or for interior decoration, often produced in Asian porcelain workshops influenced by classical Chinese aesthetics.The hand-painted appearance of the cobalt decoration, with subtle variations in tone and brushwork, gives the design depth and character. Both decorative and versatile, this vase works beautifully as a standalone object or as a vessel for flowers, bringing a timeless blue-and-white elegance to any interior setting.
