Description

A rare pair of Singer Corporation industrial workshop stools, dating from the early 20th century. These stools were used in the workshops and factories associated with the sewing machines of the renowned American brand. They rest on a cast iron tripod base bearing the SINGER logo in relief. The central metal column is equipped with a screw adjustment system for height control. The circular seats are upholstered in original green leather, displaying a beautiful patina of use and signs of age that attest to their authenticity and industrial history. The set possesses an aesthetic typical of workshop furniture and vintage industrial design, now highly sought after for loft decorating, artist studios, or contemporary interiors.
