Description

A Regency-period Worcester porcelain plate of fluted and scalloped form, decorated in the long-established "Dragon in Compartments" design. The decoration features opposing panels with a dragon and a kylin, divided by reserves of vases and precious objects, painted in colours inspired by the Chinese famille verte palette.
The form continues Worcester's shaped plates of the 1765-1775 decade, while the crowned BFB mark on the reverse identifies production within the Barr, Flight & Barr partnership, circa 1807-1813.
The plate retains two original "Flight Collection" labels. These relate to the important Worcester collection assembled by Howard Emerson Flight -- Lord Flight -- direct descendant of Thomas Flight, purchaser of the factory in 1783. Elements
