Description

A watch signed BULOVA, a leading American manufacturer. Dating from the 1940s, it remains a prime example of Art Deco design: its elongated shape and rectangular dial reflect the aesthetics of the era, as seen in other major brands. The case is particularly well-crafted: its overall tonneau shape is achieved through a diamond-shaped pattern of sloping facets, both horizontally and vertically, creating a 3D effect with distinctly Art Deco lines. It features a finely guilloché edge, a black dial with a white "railroad track" graduation, typical of the period, and a small seconds subdial at 6 o'clock, also characteristic of the era, enhanced by a sunburst graduation. Originally designed as a men's watch, its aesthetics and size make it perfectly unisex today. As was customary for the time, the manufacturer
