Description

A raised embroidery depicting a lion in a palm tree landscape, a decorative work from the 19th century, circa 1860-1880. This composition reflects the taste for exotic subjects that developed in Europe during the mid-19th century, fueled by travelogues and the Oriental imagination. The lion's mane is rendered in textile cords, creating a relief that gives the piece an almost sculptural presence. This carefully crafted ornamental work is presented in its original box frame, highlighting its status as a decorative object and a curiosity.
