Description

Charming Portrait of a Young Woman - Empire Period - Oil on Panel. An elegant portrait of a young woman, depicted in bust-length, wearing a high-waisted white dress with a blue shawl, typical of early 19th-century fashion during the Empire period. The young woman wears a delicate gathered muslin headdress and a finely pleated collar. Her fresh complexion, rosy cheeks, and direct gaze are rendered with great softness and delicacy. The dark background highlights her skin tone and the subtle drapery. The quality of the modeling and the charm of the expression evoke the intimate portraits of the bourgeoisie during the First Empire, in the style of early 19th-century Parisian workshops. This oil on panel, both decorative and refined, retains all the charm of portraits from this period. The painting
