Description

An important double-bodied buffet dating from the 17th century, boasting beautiful architecture and ample storage capacity. The upper section opens with four double-opening molded doors, revealing an interior fitted with several original shaped shelves, offering an elegant display for tableware or decorative objects. The back is composed of antique vertical panels, and the whole piece retains a beautiful dark patina. The lower section opens with four molded doors resting on a simple base. The entire piece is topped with a curved cornice that accentuates the silhouette and elegance of the piece. This buffet testifies to the skill of 17th-century cabinetmakers with its molded panels, harmonious proportions, and two-part construction facilitating transport. The antique hardware and the patina of age
