Description

An important painting from the school of Joannes Hermans, known as Monsù Aurora (Antwerp? c. 1630 - documented until 1665), a Flemish master active in Italy in the 17th century and known for his refined still lifes of animals and hunting scenes.The work depicts a flock of ducks immersed in a highly evocative twilight atmosphere. The composition is distinguished by its intense naturalistic rendering: the different species are depicted with extraordinary attention to anatomical detail and the quality of their feathers, masterfully illuminated by a grazing light emerging from the dark background.A hallmark of Monsù Aurora's work is his ability to combine realism and Baroque theatricality: the chiaroscuro contrast, the depth of the marshy landscape, and the vibrant rendering of the water
