Description

This portrait, painted around the 1930s, depicts a figure with a sober and meditative expression, rendered in a palette dominated by muted shades of green, gray, and beige. The brushwork is characterized by a free and visible impasto: the brushstrokes remain apparent and contribute to the construction of both the face and the background. The artist favors a sensitive approach to modeling, allowing the brushstrokes and the vibrancy of the paint surface to emerge. The frame dates from the time of the painting.
