Description

Dagger known as a Katar Djamadhar, with its scabbard. Mughal Empire, India, late 18th century. Iron, steel, gold damascene. Total length: 37 cm (without scabbard) - Blade length: 25 cm. Steel blade, double-edged, with central ridges and double hollow fuller lines. Pointed tip; engraved multi-lobed pommel. The blade is forged in one piece and leads to a U-shaped hilt, composed of a double branch adorned with floral and foliage engravings, convex on the outer surfaces, and connected by two transverse leaf-decorated bars. The decoration is overlaid with gold damascene. The perimeter is entirely chiseled, forming a frieze of steel beads. The scabbard is made of wood, covered in velvet. The original damascene work is in excellent condition. Text and photos ©
