Description

This elegant large porcelain vase with its original lid is decorated in a classic blue and white palette inspired by traditional Chinese export porcelain. The piece features a distinctive hexagonal form, giving it a sculptural presence while allowing each facet to display a beautifully detailed scene. The decoration depicts an idyllic natural landscape with flowering branches, delicate blossoms, birds perched among the foliage, butterflies in flight, and stylized plants rising from rocky ground. These motifs are rendered in cobalt blue on a softly toned white ground, creating a refined contrast that highlights the precision of the hand-painted decoration. The scenes evoke traditional East Asian garden imagery symbolizing harmony, renewal, and nature. The lid is similarly decorated with floral motifs and surmounted by a finial, completing the balanced silhouette of the piece. Around the base and shoulder runs a decorative border pattern that frames the main panels and emphasizes the geometric form of the vase. Likely dating to the late 20th century and inspired by earlier Chinese porcelain traditions, this decorative vase was designed to echo classical export wares while fitting beautifully into both traditional and contemporary interiors. With its generous scale and striking blue-and-white design, it makes an impressive decorative statement whether placed on the floor, beside an armchair, or displayed as part of a larger porcelain collection. The vase remains in very good condition, with its lid intact and no visible structural damage.
