Description

Oriental-style inkwell table lamp with camel - 19th century A rare, multifunctional desk accessory, made between the late 19th and early 20th centuries. An elegant period table lamp characterized by a refined, exotic and decorative taste. The veined marble base houses a metal sculpture depicting a crouching camel, an iconographic element reminiscent of the Middle East and desert caravans. The camel sculpture includes functional elements, such as an inkwell (identifiable by the raised lid on its back), and four turned bronze elements positioned on the sides of the marble base, which serve as pen rests. This piece is part of the eclectic, Orientalist-style production that spread throughout Europe between the late 19th and early 20th centuries, intended for furnishing bourgeois studies and
