Description

Chinese ovoid porcelain vase decorated with a naturalistic scene depicting birds perched on plum blossom branches, accompanied by butterflies in flight--traditional symbols of spring, prosperity, and happiness in Chinese culture. The decoration features delicate polychrome tones on a light celadon background, with naturalistic details in the flowers and birds, while the branches are rendered with calligraphic strokes typical of traditional porcelain painting. The vase is completed with a lid with a handle and a lacquered wooden base, likely made for display. The base features a red mark in an archaic style, likely inspired by Qing (Qianlong) era marks, a common practice in 20th-century decorative art.
