Description

Description These three marble mortars, dating from the 18th and 19th centuries, are hand-carved stone vessels that combine practical use with decorative appeal. Each piece displays natural veining and tonal variation from pale cream to warm ochre, with softly rounded rims and small lug handles reflecting traditional functional design. The surfaces show age-related wear and a developed patina, evidencing their original use while enhancing their sculptural presence and visual appeal. Artist Artist unknown. Artist Details These mortars are examples of traditional European stone craftsmanship, produced for everyday domestic or workshop use. Their durable material and simple, balanced forms reflect longstanding utilitarian design adapted for both function and enduring aesthetic
