Description

An important pair of carved wooden sculptures depicting two tavern musicians, one a violinist, the other raising his glass in an expressive and animated pose. Italian work from the late 19th century, most likely Venetian, characteristic of pieces produced for Grand Tour enthusiasts. The highly expressive faces, reminiscent of the commedia dell'arte, along with the theatrical gestures, lend the pieces a lively and particularly decorative character. The wood carvings are typical of Italian workshops of this period. They retain a beautiful original brown patina, highlighting the volumes and the quality of the carving. Their large size and presence make these sculptures a striking decorative ensemble, ideal for a characterful interior, a cottage, a restaurant, or a bar. Height: approximately 100 cm.
