where the reliefs are highlighted by a line of darker enamel, giving the impression of a "tubular" or enameled relief decoration. This technique brings a depth and interplay of light that enhances every detail. The color palette is soft and elegant, blending pastel tones such as pink, green, and creamy yellow with more intense areas of reddish-brown on the neck and base. These subtly balanced contrasts reinforce the unique character of this piece. The style is reminiscent of Art Nouveau or the early 20th century, an era when art and craft combined to create objects that were both useful and beautiful. I would like to point out that this vase has undergone two previous restorations, as it had two chips that are no longer visible. A small crack is present on the neck, visible on the inside, but this does not detract from its beauty or decorative value. The interior of the vase is glazed in a deep blue, adding a touch of mystery and refinement. Despite these minor details, this vase remains a collector's item, ideal for lovers of art and antique porcelain. It will bring a touch of elegance and sophistication to any interior, whether in a living room, entryway, or even a library. It's an object that tells a story, one that has stood the test of time and continues to fascinate with its timeless beauty. Feel free to contact me with any questions or to see this piece up close.
