Description

Oil on canvas. 19th-century Northern European School. The painting is a reproduction of a 1662 work by Jan Siberechts (1627-1703), currently housed in the Royal Museums of Fine Arts in Brussels. The Flemish painter made a name for himself with his scenes of country and rural life, enlivened by peasant figures going about their daily activities, particularly robust female figures dressed in bright colors. These characteristics are also evident in this reproduction, where, in the farmyard of a farmhouse in the middle of the countryside, the entire family is busy with various activities: on the left, the man unloads bundles of wood from the cart, which a woman is carrying toward the house; on the right, the boy opens the stable to lead the flock of goats and sheep to pasture; in the center are three robust female figures, namely two women observing the third, who is busy delousing a little girl. The colors of the figures' clothes stand out vividly and brightly against the brown and dark colors of the background elements (the house and the countryside), which are dominated by a sky that is also dark and thick with gray clouds. The painting is presented in a period gold frame. The item is in good condition, with minor signs of wear. We try to present the item's actual condition as accurately as possible with the photos.
