Description

A charming bronze-patinated spelter sculpture depicting a young girl playing with a hoop, entitled "Children's Games," by the sculptor Anton Nelson. This delicate scene, typical of Art Nouveau sensibility, highlights the world of childhood through natural and graceful movement. The treatment of the face, the fluidity of the drapery, and the lively pose lend the piece a beautiful expressiveness. The sculpture rests on a circular patinated spelter base, perfectly in harmony with the rest of the work. This decorative piece from the 1900s is of fine quality and highly representative of late 19th-century mass-produced sculptures. Dimensions: Height: 18 cm; Base diameter: 7 cm. Condition: Excellent condition. The bronze patina is even and well-preserved. No damage or missing parts.
