Description

A pair of English pendant lights from the 1930s, each with two lights and ribbed holophane glass shades. A vertical brass stem extends from the ceiling rose. At its base, the light fixture splits into two curved arms, forming a symmetrical silhouette. Each arm curves outwards and downwards in an elegant S-shape. On either side, the arms support two identical shades. These ribbed, clear glass globes diffuse and soften the light thanks to their vertical ribs. The shades are secured by metal brackets.
