Description

Porcelain biscuit group 19th century gallant scene on the harp Louis XVI style Beauty and elegance frozen in a moment of miniaturized realism, this is what defines the porcelain biscuits of this period. From 19th century German pottery, this small decoration turned into a work of art is a gallant allegory, that of a young woman seeking to learn the harp, and that of a man helping her, or courting her like an admirer or a lover in stunning miniaturized realism. Covered with motifs and arabesques specific to the baroque style of Louis XVI, this charming biscuit is a real little enigma between the charm of learning and the court at the time of the Ancien Régime, revisited in the 19th century.
