Description

Some objects transcend their function to become true works of art capable of telling a story. This rare pair of sculptural handles from 1910 represents a unique opportunity for collectors and lovers of historical design. Crafted in bronze using the ancient and complex lost-wax casting technique, these handles depict two nude male figures characterized by extraordinary plasticity and expressive vigor. They boast an excellent vintage patina that enhances their texture and authenticity. Their provenance is of exceptional significance: these pieces were selected to furnish a prominent residence by the architect Piero Portalupi, a pivotal figure of Italian Modernism, giving them an invaluable cultural and historical pedigree. Measuring 20 cm in length and 7 cm in height, these are not merely accessories, but
